Market & Portfolio Developments

Market Review

April saw declines across equity and bond markets. Notably, previously resilient segments (such as Brazil and Energy equities) were in the red with US equities being one of the worse performing market this year. Bonds were not spared either having recorded their worst month on record. In contrast, investors in Alternatives would have seen positive and meaningful returns amid the broader market sell-off.

Main Contributors 'What did well?'

Our Trend-following Alternatives contributed positively to returns amid weaknesses in markets, flagging the importance of True Diversification in a time where bonds and equities declined together. On the same note, Healthcare equities continued to prove valuable in cushioning portfolio volatility, having shown strong resilience as compared to harder hit sectors such as technology and financials. Our Emerging Markets Debt and Global Unconstrained Credit positions continued to hold well while overall bond markets were down.

Main Detractors 'What underperformed?'

Emerging Market (EM) equities detracted from overall performance led by China names as uncertainty around 'Zero-Covid' restrictions remained. We are cautiously optimistic that better valuations, coupled with accommodative monetary and fiscal policies will be supportive for China and the broader EM markets going forward. US Small-Caps also saw declines around the high-growth segments amid a broader 'growth' sell-off in view of the Fed rate hikes.

Market Outlook

Questions surrounding the possibility of further declines are naturally surfacing as we go through a period of extended declines. Indeed, if investors were to heed only their emotions and news headlines (such as warnings of a recession indicated by the yield curve inversion), they would find themselves worrying about tougher times ahead. Looking back at history, however, investors would be surprised to find out that equities have tended to post double-digit gains 12 months after the yield curve recession signal. We continue to be cautiously optimistic and remain confident that our FVT process will reward patient and bold (buy-the-dip) investors over the long-run.
