Market & Portfolio Developments

Market Review

Markets started the same way February ended; on edge. Markets saw-sawed as they sold off on news of escalation and rallied on news of peace talks. Equity markets were volatile as headline news labelling China and Russia “uninvestable” roiled weak hands into selling. Bonds markets declined against the backdrop of rising interest rates, while commodity prices rallied amid high demand and tight supply.

Main Contributors ‘What did well?’

At a time when global equities and bonds remained down, our Trend-following Alternatives position continued to deliver positive and meaningful returns, having benefitted from active positioning in the commodity markets. Healthcare and Quality Value also proved to be an important diversifier of returns (as part of our stability exposure) as they delivered positive returns amid broader declines in equity markets. On the same note, Global Unconstrained Credit held up meaningfully well while overall bond markets were down.

Main Detractors ‘What underperformed?’

China ‘A’ equities detracted from performance as a myriad of concerns (such as ADR delisting, divestment out of China and Covid lockdowns) alongside looming geopolitical risks held China markets down. Likewise, Europe Value equities continued to be encumbered by investors’ sentiment which are hinged on near-term risk over Europe’s energy dependence on Russia. Our EM Short Duration bonds also declined in face of volatility from the aforementioned worries.

Market Outlook

Increased volatility and uncertainty in markets have the tendency to sway investors into cutting losses. However, such periods present a good opportunity to invest in areas where attractive risk/reward lie. While we continue to monitor the state of economic fundamentals and events, and tread opportunistically forward with our FVT process, we expect favourable set-ups (such as favourable medium-long term economic and policy cycles in China) to pave the path for positive portfolio returns.
