Market & Portfolio Developments

Market Review

April saw declines across equity markets. Notably, Asian equities continued to slide amid lockdown measures in China and supply chain disruptions. The ongoing geopolitical tension also continued to contribute to weaknesses in the region. Month-to-date, Asian equities were down -5.29% relative to our Asian equity fund which declined -1.94%.

Main Contributors 'What did well?'

Our 'Value' investments continue to deliver performance despite weaker markets, highlighting the importance of investing with a margin of safety. Contrast this with the rise and fall of Special Purpose Acquisition Companies SPACs. Once deemed by many as an opportunity to bet on the future success of private companies before they become public, SPACs became an overheated space where investment ended up with poor returns and the enthusiasm eventually withered. Such episodes are why we continue to invest in time-tested strategies (e.g. Value) that have proven to deliver returns.

Main Detractors 'What underperformed?'

Our China names continued to detract from performance amid persisting concerns around China's Covid-19 situation and lockdowns. But we remain confident that such near-term uncertainties and washed-out sentiments are temporary developments that would reward patient and bold investors when markets eventually rebound over the long-run.

Market Outlook

We are positive on the trajectory of Asia equities, as the reopening of ASEAN countries pave way for economic development. Specifically, in China, further commitment by the People's Bank of China (PBOC) to support the economy with additional monetary easing and fiscal measures are reassuring signs of more favourable times ahead, even as the impact of COVID-19 lockdowns lingers. Nevertheless, we continue to keep a close eye on the development in Asia, and in particular China where cheaper valuations have provided favourable risk-reward opportunities.
