Market & Portfolio Developments

Market Review

May was a relative non-event compared to the first four months of 2022. Global equities were up marginally by 0.12% respectively but remained depressed overall since the start of the year. These selling pressures are not uncommon. They have occurred throughout history and reflect the flushing of weak hands that creates volatility and weaknesses in markets. But these have often been buying opportunities for bold and patient investors.

Main Contributors 'What did well?'

'Value' segments within Europe and US Small-Cap equities contributed positively to returns even as markets remained weak after a series of unfavourable events kickstarted the year. They highlight the importance of investing at better valuations to benefit from positive asymmetric risk; having a good margin-of-safety allows for potentially bigger upside than downside.

Main Detractors 'What underperformed?'

Healthcare equities lagged after having outperformed in the past months when broader markets were down, but their stable earnings profile means that they are an effective way for us to diversify the portfolio amid growth concerns. Asia Pacific equities remain weak as uncertainties around China Covid-19 restrictions dampened the region's performance. But green shoots of recovery are in sight as China moves to ease covid curbs.

Market Outlook

Major markets may be down, but they are good news for investors who take a long-term approach to investment. Such periods represent windows of opportunities for them to accumulate good investments at a discounted rate and, in doing so, pave the way for better future returns – markets do recover and move higher. The path to recovery will no doubt be affected by policy responses to inflation, and how the world transitions to covid as an endemic disease, but one thing is for sure: markets have always been a device that transfers money from the impatient to the patient.
